for the Administration's trune, in our eyes, is, that it works to being about that awful calamity. The horrors of Mr. Lincoln's proclamation could only be equalled by the disasters of a broken Union, which it is calculated to

We may be asked in what do we rest our bope that the Union will not be broken up? It is for causes that always have existed, and probably always will. Prist, the geography and products of the country are such that the Urlan is nicessary to the West. The grain and stock must have an outlet to the market. held the mouth of the Mississippl was a untu ral enemy to the United States, and time can only prove the truth of this assertior.

Again: slavery, which Mr. Line oln nolds to be a cause of division, is in fact a ligament binding the border States together. No treaty could be drawn which would as effectually protect the owner of the slave as that guarni-teed under the Constitution. The citizens over the Ohio would be then a fereign power, bostile in feeling to our Government, and to slavery, and they would destroy and evade clavery, and they would destroy and evade when the protection of furtilities. If Kentnelly, was to adopt Mr. arate nation. If Kentucky was to adopt Mr Liucolu's policy of immediate emancipation. she would at once lose all interest to that ex tent in the Union.

If Kentucky were to consent to give up her Southern market, and allow the Southern States to go, she must also be prepared to give up slavery with it. She could not remain, by any possibility, le the Union as a clave Stat.

When we come to view it in a legal point of view, we find that before there can be a di, solution there must be a convention of the States, three-fourths of which must consent to il. That does not seem probable.

There, perhaps, are reasons why there ought There, perhaps, are reasons why there ought to be a dissolution rather than why there should not. Dissolution of the Union.

Many disheartened loyalists and more explicing Sec assionlats look to the dissolution of the Union at a foregine conclusion. The New York Tribune is a ready named the hour upon which this calamity is to take place. Stevens has also declared from his place in C. Ingress that it is already brokka up. The Secretary of the Treasury, In his late annual report, says:

The first loans, being of a magnitude hitherto undreamed of in our market, were necessarily made at an interest which he regarded as high, though lenders attenuously insisted on higher; but large amounts are now obtain fitths per cent. Whether a similar result may attend inture loans must be determined partly by the l gislation of Caugress, partly by the conduct of the war, and part y by the condition of the markets for money.

Thus lightly does he pass over the important fact that, so lar as the Government notes until March or May, the time set by Greeley are used as currency, they "constitute prac for the dissolution of the Union.
